“The city of the falling star,” where urban functions in harmony with nature create Japan’s most comfortable place to live

The name “Kudamatsu” comes from the time of Empress Suiko, when the Great Star (also known as the North Star) is said to have fallen on a pine tree in Aoyaginoura, part of the villa belonging to the Washizu clan. The star shone there for seven days and seven nights, sparking a prophecy that a prince from Baekje would come to the land. Three years later, Prince Rinsho, considered the ancestor of the Ouchi clan that would subsequently rule Yamaguchi, came from Baekje (called “Kudara” in Japanese).

Because of this, “Hoshi ga kudatta matsu” (“the pine where the star fell”) became “Kudari Matsu,” then “Kudamatsu.”

Another theory holds that Prince Rinsho visited to open trade with Baekje, and a mispronunciation of the word “Kudaratsu,” meaning “port of commerce with Kudara,” became “Kudamatsu.” This then began to be written as it was pronounced.

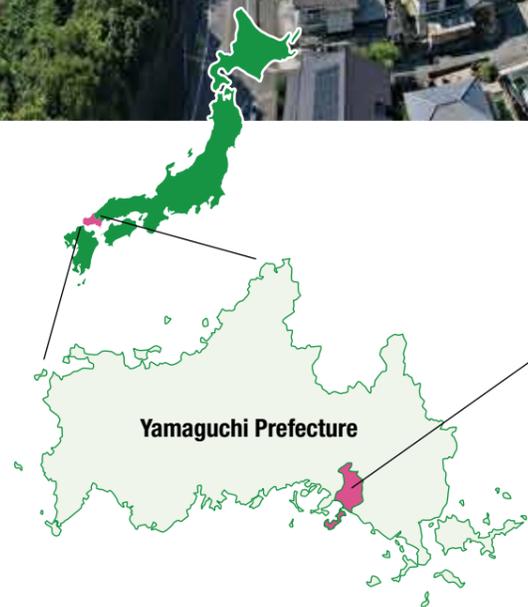

These legends were passed down and live on in daily life, as Kudamatsu is known as “the city of the falling star.”

Greeting from the Mayor Message

Kudamatsu City has actively engaged in a wide variety of “monozukuri,” meaning “making things,” as an industrial city from the Taisho period to the present day, against the backdrop of a fine natural harbor facing the Seto Inland Sea. Thanks to large commercial facilities opening one after another in recent years, the city has also continued to make rapid progress as a regional base for business and logistics.

In addition, Kudamatsu is highly rated as a city in which it is comfortable to live, surrounded by the rich nature of the mountains and ocean, and compactly bringing together a lively city atmosphere with the feel of the laidback countryside.

I have developed many policies through the efforts of all of Kudamatsu concentrating the powers of citizens, the local community, and industry for the purpose of the further development of the city built by our predecessors, and to make it the most livable city in Japan.

I would love for this directory to deepen people’s understanding of Kudamatsu, give them a sense of its attractions, and motivate them to be involved in the city.
